se Mand, and the misplaced episite to the tailor, is 4 o'clock that afternoon a military-looking fease, sitting beside an invalid daughter, got black in the face as she read on the stamped pacer of the son-in-law; "Baby mine; Your pet will eable after all to get away. Have sprung the allest kind of a stal on the Vampire, which I will sil you about when we meet. Take a cab to Vesey treet, and get there at sharp 8 with a big appetite or a good supper. You sweet little toad, it will see a long day for your old man; but 8 o'clock will ave to make a landing, and then hurrah!" That is the way the lightlang struck in one place.

Unlown, in a gorgeous flat, Mand Tricot puzzled wer this mysterious epistie; "You old fraud, that haviot is the worst job that ever was done. I hought the obscike beat the world giving me fits, there you are worse than ever. I shall cerainly have to try some one else, and I don't want so, but you are certainly getting infernally carecast, will let you have some money during the month, but I'm beauty hard had was imagining her acceptance of the sound Will let you have some fioney during the sin, but I'm beastly hard up just now." I the moment that Maud was imagining her etheart was gone completely mad, and an iristed, middle-aged woman was inaking her si to go down-town, George's tailor studied this ument with a dased expression: 'Kindest of mds, break to my little one this impleasant as: No Georgis to-night. The bank has a meethat will no doubt necessitate a run from here loston; will wire you in the morthing if that aid be the case. No Dress Reform for Him. [From the Wichite (Ens.) Engle.]

Next to man's love for woman comes his admira-tion for her. All fashion is but a struggle to en-compass the beautiful and all dress reform is but a compass the beautiful and all dress reform is but a strangle of vinegary females, who, despairing of ever being loved themselves, try to render all womankind as hideous and unlovable as themselves. Eliminate man's love for woman and what is there left between man and woman but the gross—the instincts of the animal. Should all the worsen of Wichita adopt the new bags-for-petitocat arrangement a hundred judges and a thomand lawyers couldn't take care of the divorce suits. A young man would fly from a girl fixed up in these hags as he would from a walking pestilence, while a married man, when bedtime came, would simply take to the barn until his wife had loosened the tackle and permitted these monstrosities to collapse.

Woman With the Tack Hammer

This is the season when people who are moving into hired houses are in many cases discovering how great-are the ravages of former tenants in the way of driving nails and tacks. A single feeble woman and a tack hammer will work more dedecorate to a house in a week than a professional decorator can put right in a month. Two women who dwall alone in an apartment will in a single winter agot every square inch of the place, except the celling, with tack or nail holes, while if there are three lone females in the family, it is generally casier to tear the house down than to attempt to repair the ravages in a less wholesale manner. Surely the ways of a woman with a tack hammer are past finding out, as many an unlucky house-holder has learned to his cost.
